

Northern Virginia moving in the right direction

Re: “What now for the GOP?” Editorial, Nov. 10

The Republican Party must learn from last Tuesday’s election that its future success depends upon returning to its basic principles of limited government and the personal integrity of its elected officials.

Your recommendation — if accepted — of Rep. Mike Pence, R-Ind., and Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., as leaders of the “new” GOP would go a long way toward restoring Republicans to power.

Northern Virginia is fortunate to be represented by Republican state Sen. Ken Cuccinelli, who embodies the very essence of your editorial. Cuccinelli has twice been elected on a platform of limited government and personal responsibility. His record clearly shows that his campaign promises become his legislative action.

A man of unquestioned morals, Cuccinelli will play an important role in the resurgence of the GOP in Virginia.

Keith G. Damon
Fairfax